Federal consumer provision complaints

The Financial Consumer Agency of Canada (FCAC) supervises federally regulated financial institutions to ensure they comply with federal consumer protection laws. For example, banks and trust companies are required by law to provide consumers with information about:

- Complaint handling procedures
- Borrowing costs on credit cards and loans
- Fees/charges and interest rates

If you have a complaint about such a consumer provision, you can contact the FCAC in writing, by telephone or through their website.
